Floaties don't prevent drownings. Life jackets do!

Don't be fooled by floaties. Floaties- also known as water wings- are not safety devices. They can easily slip off of a child's arm or deflate and they don't keep a child's head out of the water. Floaties also sometimes give parents a false sense of security and cause them to not pay as close attention. Learn more water safety tips below!

Attachment and Positive Discipline training

Saturday, Aug. 20 and 27
10 a.m. - noon
9 - 10:30 a.m.
Via Zoom

This training reviews the definition and the neurobiology of attachment. In addition, the types of attachment as well as their short-term and long term impact on child and adult well-being are addressed. Ways in which early childhood professionals can support secure attachment are discussed. Oftentimes, discipline seems to be viewed as going against a healthy parent-child relationship. This presentation focuses on the use of positive discipline and how it can support a healthy caretaker-child relationship. Click here to learn more and to register.
