

ACEs and Mental Health in Schools

As schools re-open in Palm Beach County and across the country, many parents feel relieved that they no longer have to juggle the duties of remote worker and home-school teacher, but they're also concerned about their children's return to crowded buildings amid a pandemic. Are schools prepared to meet the mental health needs of children, particularly those who already bring ACEs (Adverse Childhood Experiences) to the mix from their homes, communities, and environments? Our new blog offers some answers.

Even before the COVID-19 outbreak, children's mental health was a pandemic of its own with far too many tweens and teens experiencing severe issues, including escalating rates of anxiety and depression. Suicide rates for those aged 10 to 14 years old tripled between 2007 and 2017. Researchers expect the post-pandemic mental health crisis to cause these numbers to rise even more. We need effective services in schools to help address these concerns and support for teachers and staff who are on the front lines of managing them.

Learn what services are in place locally and how we can continue to support not only our children but also our teachers and other school staff with scientifically-proven programs provided by caring professionals.

3 Realms of ACEs

Adverse childhood and community experiences (ACEs) can occur in the household, the community, or in the environment and cause toxic stress. Left unaddressed, toxic stress from ACEs harms children and families, organizations, systems and communities, and reduces the ability of individuals and entities to respond to stressful events with resiliency. Research has shown that there are many ways to reduce and heal from toxic stress and build healthy, caring communities.

Recognizing Excellence in Advocacy

Dori Foster-Morales

Laura Davis Smith

Ahead of the 2nd Annual Family Law Mental Health Summit, we are proud to announce the following awards to those in the legal profession who passionately advocate on behalf of children,

This year's recipient of Center for Child Counseling's "Judge Ron Alvarez Resiliency Award" is Dori Foster-Morales. The award recognizes those in the legal profession who promote a fuller understanding of the science of adversity as it pertains to the law. Ms. Foster-Morales is the current President of the Florida Bar and she has made it her mission to bring mental health and wellness awareness to the forefront of the 107,000 members of the Florida Bar.

Laura Davis Smith has been selected as Center for Child Counseling's 2020 Recipient of the "Jane Robinson Child Advocacy Award" named after Center for Child Counseling's founder who dedicated her professional career to promoting infant and childhood mental health. Ms. Davis Smith is a board-certified family attorney and past chair of the Family Law Section of the Florida Bar. She is a tireless advocate for children and we proudly acknowledge her efforts on their behalf in the courtroom and in our community.

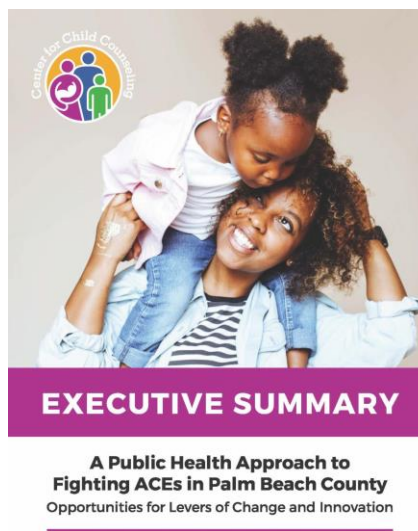

Executive Summary of ACEs in Palm Beach County

In 2018, we received a grant from the region's largest private health funder, Quantum Foundation, to determine the local ACEs (Adverse Childhood Experiences) landscape. It was the start of an extensive year-long period of research, interviews, and stakeholder meetings which resulting in a white paper entitled: "A Public Health Approach to Fighting ACEs in Palm Beach County: Opportunities for Levers of Change and Innovation."

To distill the highlights of that white paper, we have prepared an Executive Summary -- an 8-page encapsulation of the cornerstone findings of the full report.

While we believe every page of the white paper is full of key information that will inform and move stakeholders, we understand that a more digestible overview will be of interest, too.
